Lee has a diverse range of experience within the specialisation of landscape design. His portfolio includes a multitude of urban revitalization projects, large scale planning projects and iconic community development schemes.

This project range has enabled Lee to work on a variety of scales and at every stage of the works, from outline planning through concept design, design development, construction documentation and contract administration.

One of the most important aspects of his career has been the understanding and combination of hardscape forms and materials in urban landscape design. This has provided Lee with the ability to design freely and creatively whilst still maintaining a strong sense of the buildability of the end product. This also extends to the use of softscape materials; Lee has an extensive knowledge of planting and utilises this to enhance and support his designs.

Lee has worked both in New Zealand and on an international level, joining award winning local firm Isthmus Group as a graduate and then employed by international planning and architecture firm Wimberly Allison Tong & Goo (WATG) as a L.A and planner in their London office.

On his return to New Zealand Lee established Bespoke Landscape Architects. The company continues to expand its portfolio, working on a varied range of local projects and also maintaining an involvement on international projects in contract to WATG.

Lee has also recently provided his services as a design tutor for the Landscape Architecture programme at UNITEC.
